Amazing Castles in Spain: Four of the Best

Fans of old Disney movies will know what Snow White's castle looks like. But did you know that it's said to be based on a real castle in Spain — the Alcázar of Segovia? This castle is almost the shape of the front of a ship — built on a rock between two rivers. First used by the Romans, its location made it a very difficult place to attack. It's one of thousands of amazing castles in Spain.

Bellver Castle

Many people visit Mallorca for its bars and beaches, but if you're on this island, take a trip to Bellver Castle, just outside the main city of Palma. This 14th century castle is known for the large ring at its center, something that is unusual in European castles. People can also walk around the top of the central ring, which offers views of the castle below, as well as over the town and out to sea.

One of the most popular places in the country to visit, Granada's Alhambra is a fortress (堡垒) built by the North Africans who ruled Spain for more than seven centuries. Visitors love the palaces inside known as the Palacios Nazaríes, with their beautiful wooden ceilings. Travel website Lonely Planet says these palaces are the most beautiful Islamic buildings in Europe.

Coca Castle

From far away, this castle in central Spain looks a little like a wedding cake — if wedding cakes were brown-brick and in the Gothic style. Isabel Allende, born in 1942 in Peru, is a Chilean-American writer. When she was a young girl, her father Tomas was appointed to work in Chile, causing them to move from Peru to Chile. During the 1960s, she began work in television journalism and eventually became a television hostess. From 1969 to 1973, she was an editor of a children's magazine.

Allende is the author of over twenty books which have been translated into numerous languages and sold over 65 million copies. In addition to writing novels, she has also penned short fiction, plays and stories for children. A letter to her sick, elderly grandfather became the manuscript of her first novel. She rose to prominence in Latin American literature after the success of this novel. Allende's own experiences from Chile have filled much of her writing through the years, and her book Paula is a memoir of her childhood and youth in Chile and her departure from that country.

Allende has been a highly influential voice in Latin American literature, often providing an important female perspective on the world. Allende's writing style combines realistic writing with surprising elements of magic. Her work is sometimes compared to the work of Gabriel Marquez, a famous Colombian novelist known for his work in the magical realist style — "magical realism". However, her voice is also considered distinct with a style that combines concern for the inner, personal lives of her characters with their physical and social environments.

Two of Allende's works have been adapted for feature films. She has won many awards, including the Dorothy and Lilian Gish Prize, which is given to whoever has contributed to the beauty of the world and to our understanding of it. Although she has an international reputation for writing, she states she doesn't consider her books her greatest achievement, but her family and her time devoted to assisting others to be more vital.

24. Why did Allende move to Chile?

- A. To live with her father.
- B. To obtain more job offers.
- C. To look after her grandfather.
- D. To get more writing materials.

25. Which is closest in meaning to "rose to prominence" in Paragraph 2?

- A. Became famous.
- B. Gained wealth.
- C. Remained unknown.
- D. Changed a profession.

26. What can we learn about Allende's works?

- A. The topics basically focus on women's world.
- B. The materials come from her experience as a TV hostess.
- C. The writing style can be considered as "magical realism".
- D. The content mainly highlights private lives of the characters.

27. What does Allende consider to be more meaningful?

- A. Winning many awards.
- B. Spending her time helping others.
- C. Earning an international fame.
- D. Adapting two works for feature films.

I turned 65 this February, a big milestone. The last 12 months has indeed been a time of profound thinking for me, but not for the reasons you may think.

Recently our culture has started to acknowledge that a perfect woman image is totally unrealistic. I suppose there are a small minority of women born with incredible genes. But for most of us, short of starving ourselves, having plastic surgery, or airbrushing our photos, perfection is an unattainable goal.

I applaud many celebrity women who have come forward recently and said, "Hey, you see that picture of me on the magazine cover. This is what I really looked like before specialized hair and makeup and the magic of Photoshop." I am so happy that our daughters and granddaughters are being raised with a much more realistic concept of what beauty is.

Being a woman of a certain age, that old message of feminine (女性的) perfection took hold long ago and has been hard to shake. My legs, waist and stomach are bigger than the charts say they should be. I would avoid looking for too long in the mirror. A swimsuit always required a cover-up to be worn over it. I had been very successfully taught to be ashamed of my imperfect body.

However, after a pretty serious health issue last year, I started to have a different feeling about my body. This body has given me two incredible children and endured too many surgeries. My belly, back, feet and knees are marked with countless scars but finally I see what they truly are — my battle scars. My extra pounds are the result of countless dinners I have made and enjoyed with those I love. My scars remind me of all the talented and kind doctors and nurses who have looked after me.

My body has allowed me a wonderful life thus far. I thought my body was not ideal, but now I thank it for being a source of strength, endurance and pleasure. At 65, I finally realize it is truly beautiful.

28. Why did the author mention celebrity women in Paragraph 3?

- A. To show perfection is difficult for celebrities to achieve.
- B. To indicate the concept of beauty is becoming more realistic.
- C. To suggest only a minority of women are born with incredible genes.
- D. To prove a perfect body image requires a strict diet and much exercise.

29. What does Paragraph 4 mainly talk about?

- A. The body parts that the author felt unsatisfied with.
- B. The body image that a woman should keep at a certain age.

- C. The tricks that the author used to avoid facing her imperfect body.
D. The effect that the traditional feminine perfection had on the author.
30. What made the author feel different about her body?
A. A severe health problem. B. The impact of celebrity women.
C. The social concept of beauty. D. Encouragement from her family.
31. What is the author's main purpose in writing the article?
A. To tell us what a perfect woman image should be.
B. To express her gratitude to the doctors and nurses.
C. To share her understanding of beauty after going through a lot.
D. To compare the beauty standards between the past and the present.

Mountain lions are not commonly thought of as animals that swim well. But at least for one adventurous cat, that couldn't be further from the truth. A new study recorded a young male mountain lion paddling (划水) two-thirds of a mile from the mainland of Washington State to an uninhabited island in Puget Sound. The GPS-collared mountain lion, known as Nolan, took a winding path through the suburbs of Olympia, and along the coast, before taking to the sea.

The researchers also combed through historical records and found evidence of mountain lions inhabiting an additional four islands outside of the range of this youngster's swim, all of over a mile from shore or the nearest island. This suggests the animals can swim even farther at times, perhaps close to a mile and a quarter. Young male mountain lions often undertake difficult and long journeys in search of new territory, as was the case for Nolan.

"We're redefining the mountain lion in our minds as an animal that can swim and is willing to swim," says study co-author Mark Elbroch. "Water shouldn't be seen as a barrier to movement to any large animal." In Brazil's Pantanal, mountain lions regularly swim in the vast wetland during the wet season. In 2010, Elbroch and his colleagues documented a tagged cat repeatedly swimming across a large lake in Chilean Patagonia to eat domestic sheep on an island, swimming 0.6 miles at a time.

Since mountain lion numbers are much lower than they once were and the animals avoid people, behaviors like swimming remain underappreciated, experts say.

National Geographic Explorer Audra Huffmeyer agrees. While she wasn't surprised that mountain lions can island-hop in the Salish Sea, "the distances covered are incredible... the capacity of large mountain lions to get to extreme habitats is pretty amazing".

Nolan's journey and all the data collected will help land managers understand where mountain lions travel, and help identify corridors (走廊) that need to be protected, says Jim Williams, a biologist. And the Olympic Peninsula certainly needs such guidance and protection, as its mountain lions have the lowest genetic diversity of any in the area, records show.

32. Why did Nolan swim long distances?

- A. To seek its partners. B. To reach a new habitat.
C. To hide from humans. D. To adapt to the wet climate.

33. How does the author support the underlined statement in Paragraph 3?

- A. By presenting the research record. B. By providing numerous data.
C. By describing the study process. D. By quoting experts' opinions.

34. What does Huffmeyer think of mountain lions' swimming ability?

- A. Common. B. Limited. C. Unbelievable. D. Changeable.

35. What does the author intend to show in the last paragraph?

- A. The advice on protecting mountain lions.
B. The threats mountain lions meet along their routes.
C. The corridors where mountain lions choose to travel.
D. The significance of the findings about mountain lions.

How I became a good table tennis player is still freshly in my mind. The first day I went to high school, I find some of my classmates playing table tennis.
