In all the time I've spent in China, I've had my share of emotional crises. I can't remember which one it was in particular, but I do remember how my adopted "aunt" Li once took care of me, tucking (塞被角) me up in an armchair in her Chengdu apartment, bringing me a cup of green tea, peeling and cutting fruit for me, chatting about unrelated matters as she prepared one of her wonderful Sichuanese suppers. Like many Chinese people, particularly those of the older generation, she didn't show her love for me by hugging or requesting emotional outpourings, but through food and over-concern.

It took me a while to become used to this way of expressing affection. At first I found it brusque and bossy: "Have some porridge! Drink some soup! Put on some more clothes!" But over time I came to understand what it meant. I can always tell, now, when some Chinese are becoming fond of me because they start to become over-worried about my physical needs, urging me to eat or drink, to wrap up warm, to rest. When serious-faced chef barks at me to have some more baozi for breakfast or Li presses me to have another mouthful of her red-braised pork, I know they are offering me the edible equivalent of a hug.

Food in China can mean many things. It is also art and craft and magic. It is the slices of fish that fall like snow from the knife of the chef, the slivers of meat that dance in the shimmering heat of the wok (炒菜锅), the grains of millet or rice that swell in the steamer. It is the employment of armies of microorganisms in the clay vat of jiang (酱菜缸) or the wine jar, the creating of a hundred flavors in a tiny kitchen, the transformation of natural raw materials into numerous forms. It is finding ways to generate delight in everything from a duck's tongue to the peel of an orange. It is one of the supreme expressions of human wit and creativity.

Above all, it is what connects us and makes us human.

24. Why does the writer mention her mental distress at the beginning?

- A. To compare the difference in two cultures. B. To introduce how Chinese express their love.
C. To highlight how fragile the writer used to be. D. To remind readers of the writer's homesickness.

25. Which of following is closest in meaning to the underlined word "brusque"?

- A. Abrupt and simple. B. Impolite and bitter.
C. Brave and direct. D. Demanding and abusive.

26. How does the writer develop paragraph 3 to further explain her idea?

- A. By making comparison. B. By offering more examples.
C. By analyzing cause and effect. D. By classifying cooking methods.

27. What message does the author intend to convey through the text?

- A. Every region has its own specialty. B. Food is culture, and culture is food.
C. When in Rome, do as the Romans do. D. The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

C

The world is "failing" in a commitment to stop and completely change deforestation by 2030, with global losses increasing last year, a group of NGOs and researchers warned Tuesday.

In 2021, leaders from over 100 countries and territories — representing the vast majority of the world's forests — promised to stop and change forest loss by 2030. But an annual assessment released Tuesday found global deforestation actually rose by four percent last year, and the world remains well off track to meet the 2030 commitment. "That 2030 goal is not just nice to have — it's essential for maintaining a livable climate for humanity," warned Erin Matson, a lead author of the Forest Declaration Assessment.

Forests are not only key habitats for animal life but serve as important regulators of the global climate and carbon sinks that take in the emissions human activity generates. However, deforestation last year was over 20 percent higher than it should have been to meet the leaders' commitment, with 6.6 million hectares of forest lost, much of it primary forest in tropical regions.

"Data year over year does tend to shift. So one year is not the be-all and end-all," said Matson. "But what is really important is the trend. And since the baseline of 2018 to 2020, we're going in the wrong direction."

The assessment was not universally depressing, with about 50 countries considered to be ending deforestation. In particular, Brazil, Indonesia and Malaysia saw "dramatic reductions" in forest loss. Those gains are at risk, however, the report warns. In Brazil, for instance, while there has been renewed interest in protecting the Amazon, another key ecosystem — the Cerrado savannah (大草原) — has instead become a target.

The report praised new rules introduced by the European Union intended to block the imports of commodities (商

品) that drive deforestation. But it called for stronger global action, including more money to conserve forests, and the end of subsidies (津贴) to sectors like agriculture that drive deforestation.

“The world’s forest is failing with disastrous consequences on a global scale,” said Fran Price, WWF’s global forest leader. “Since the global commitment was made, an area of tropical forest the size of Denmark has been lost. We want to see nature and forest high on the agenda!”

28. What does the assessment indicate?

- A. Tough policies should be introduced.
- B. Deforestation is increasing.
- C. Commitment should be taken seriously.
- D. Global warming is worsening.

29. How do you understand the underlined sentence by Matson?

- A. It is normal that data changes sharply.
- B. The assessment is far from accurate.
- C. Emphasis should be put on the trend.
- D. To have a clear goal in place matters.

30. What are paragraphs 5 & 6 meant to tell us?

- A. The widespread damage to forests.
- B. Proper measures yet-to-be-taken.
- C. The ban on nature-related products.
- D. Some bright sides of the situation.

31. What did Price want to convey?

- A. Forest conservation is a priority.
- B. Forest destruction is just regional.
- C. Forest restoration is a long-term project.
- D. Forest assessment should be globalized.

D

The scientist’s job is to figure out how the world works, to “torture (拷问)” nature to reveal her secrets, as the 17th century philosopher Francis Bacon described it. But who are these people in the lab coats (or sports jackets, or T-shirts and jeans) and how do they work? It turns out that there is a good deal of mystery surrounding the mystery-solvers.

“One of the greatest mysteries is the question of what it is about human beings — brains, education, culture etc. that makes them capable of doing science at all,” said Colin Allen, a cognitive scientist at Indiana University.

Two vital ingredients seem to be necessary to make a scientist: the curiosity to seek out mysteries and the creativity to solve them. “Scientists exhibit a heightened level of curiosity,” reads a 2007 report on scientific creativity. “They go further and deeper into basic questions showing a passion for knowledge for its own sake.” Max Planck, one of the fathers of quantum physics, once said, the scientist “must have a vivid and intuitive imagination, for new ideas are not generated by deduction (推论), but by an artistically creative imagination.”

But others disagree with this universal scientific mind. They believe that scientists have special abilities that set them apart. Discovering these abilities may be hard, Allen thinks, as many scientists will be reluctant to reveal them and would prefer to preserve the mystery of creativity, fearing that if it became an object of study it would lose its magic.

But for Allen, this is all part of a bigger question of what lies behind anyone’s behavior. “We are only just beginning to understand how the characteristics of organisms, including ourselves, aren’t the fixed products of either genes or of environment or culture, but each of us is the product of a continual interactive process in which we help build the environments that in turn shape us,” he said.

“As long as our best technology for seeing inside the brain requires subjects to lie nearly motionless while surrounded by a giant magnet, we’re only going to make limited progress on these questions,” Allen said.

32. Why does the author mention Max Planck in paragraph 3?

- A. To introduce a famous scientist.
- B. To stress the role of creativity in science.
- C. To compare different views on science.
- D. To illustrate what is curiosity in science.

33. What do Allen’s words in the last two paragraphs suggest?

- A. Human behavior is changeable and unpredictable.

- B. We are passively influenced by our genes and culture.
C. Our interaction with the environment makes us who we are.
D. Current technology has revealed a lot about human behavior.

34. What is Allen's attitude to the current study on the human brain?

- A. Cautious. B. Indifferent. C. Approving. D. Pessimistic.

35. What is a suitable title for the text?

- A. Who Are The Mystery-solvers B. Scientists Are Not Born But Made
C. Great Mystery: What Makes A Scientist D. Solving Mysteries: Inside A Scientist's Mind

第二节（共 5 小题；每小题 2.5 分，满分 12.5 分）

阅读下面短文，从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Many people's mood goes slightly down as the days are getting shorter. Even if you don't suffer from SAD (Seasonal Affective Disorder), also called winter depression, you might feel different than just a few weeks ago.

Does that sound familiar? 36 As Mirthy's Laughter Yoga leader, I strongly believe in the health benefits of laughter, which are indeed impressive. The most obvious gain is that it puts people in a good mood. We assess mood levels before and after the Laughter Yoga session. Many participants' mood goes up by at least two points — and that's without drugs or pills, just by “a little bit” of laughter.

Dr Madan Kataria who is a medical doctor and created Laughter Yoga did quite a bit of research and found that laughter is a mild antidepressant as it releases endorphins and serotonin. 37 — again hormones and natural opiates (天然鸦片) play a big role in it — and without side effects.

38 It reduces the levels of stress hormones in our bodies. If you keep in mind that almost 90% of all illnesses are associated with stress and tension we hold in our body, laughter is an easy remedy, isn't it? So there is some truth in the old saying: “Laughter is the best medicine” — well, at least it's a start!

Some people go to the gym first thing in the morning, if that's not your thing, just keep in mind that laughter is an aerobic exercise (有氧运动) — probably with much more fun! 39

I could go on, but I'll stop here. For more health benefits, check out the PubMed research database where you'll find over 2,600 references to laughter. 40

- A. Just bring yourself an open mind.
B. Laughter is also a great stress relief.
C. If so, I have a possible solution for you!
D. This is to support our oxygen intake even more.
E. What's more, laughter can be a natural pain killer.
F. Or maybe you can simply join us for the next Mirthy class.
G. Research found that ten minutes of laughter equals thirty minutes on the rowing machine.

第二节 (满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Over the summer I moved from Texas to Missouri. This was my second year of high school, but my first year of school in Missouri. I was really nervous about starting a new school and having people like me. I decided that I would be much happier in a new school if I made friends that were so-called “popular”. Getting in with the right group of people would make my life a whole lot better. I bought a new outfit so the first day would be perfect.

On the first day of school, scared, yet eager to begin my new life, I walked up the stairs. My first class was geometry, but where was that? I was standing in the hall looking confused, when a short, blond girl wearing glasses came up and asked, “Are you new? You look lost. Do you want me to help you find your class? My name is Diane. What's yours?” Even though she seemed a bit strange, definitely not the kind of person I wanted to be associated with, I decided to answer her anyway. I was, after all, lost.

After exchanging names, I followed her up the stairs and down a hallway on the right. When we reached my room she said, “Well, here you are. It was nice meeting you. I hope I see you again and your day goes all right.”

I said a quick thank-you and waved good-bye. Once inside the classroom, I saw one big group of people huddled around someone who seemed to be telling some sort of story. I walked over and got close enough to overhear. All eyes were glued to the guy in the middle of the circle. I decided that this guy was popular.

A few minutes later the teacher told everyone to go find a seat and get ready for the class. I managed to get one right next to the guy. I said, “Hi, my name is April and I'm new here.” He said coldly, “Hi, I'm Johnny.” That class dragged on and on. Finally, the bell rang. I turned to him and asked, “I'm not sure where my next class is, could you help me find it?” He looked at me and then said a quick no, turned back to his friends, and walked out of the classroom.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
