M: We've got two girls in in our research group, Miranda and Olivia. Do you know them?

W: Sure, Miranda is sociable and the most talkative girl I've ever met. But guess what? Olivia is just the opposite.

Text 3:

W: Here is this week's schedule, Mr Thorndyke, on Monday there is the TV interview. Your speech to the Asia society is on Tuesday afternoon. Then on Wednesday you have an appointment with your doctor and...

M: Wait you mean the video conference on Tuesday is cancelled.

Text 4:

W: It is just the holiday home where I can look out to the ocean.

M: That's why I chose this coastal cottage. It has one of the best sea views across the bay.

Text 5:

W: You must be Mr. Simpson, right?

M: Yes I am.

W: I'm Carol, Mr. Clark's secretary. Did you have a nice flight?

M: Oh yes, thank you.

W: Well, Mr. Clark has to be in the office to deal with some matters right now, so he asked me to pick you up. Now we'll go to holiday inn for dinner and Mister Clark will go straight there right away.

M: I'm a sales representative. I have traveled to 45 countries.

W: What does a sales representative do?

M: Sales representative sell products or services to potential buyers and negotiate sales terms? It's a profession where hard work and problem solving pay off.

W: Don't you get tired of travelling?

M: Not at all. It's been forty years since I started the job, but I still feel like that 25 year old guy.

W: Lucky you.

W: So what should we buy for amber's housewarming this Sunday?

M: How about this purple blue dress here?

W: No, honey, we need to get her something for her new apartment.

M: Okay, what about these pale blue scented candles?

W: She's got some already. I bought them for her last week. Look at this lamp. Pale pink is a better color to make her living room more comfy, I think.

M: It's perfect, let's get it. Hey, Alice, what's wrong? Oh, nothing. I just can't believe amber is growing up and living in her own apartment now. Do you think she'll still visit us?

M: Of course she will.

Text 8:

M: Excuse me, I need some information about some classical gardens of Suzhou near here.

W: What would you like to know?

M: Well, first I'd like directions to Gusu District. I believe there lies the number one classical garden in Suzhou. It isn't far, is it?

W: No, Gusu District is about six miles east of here, the railway station, and you're right, dating back to the Ming dynasty, Zhuozheng Garden in Gusu district is listed as world heritage site and it is a must see.

M: Oh good. Now what about Liu Yuan garden featuring the Qing dynasty's garden landscaping? And I also want to visit Tuisi Garden. Are they near each other?

W: Hmm. Well, Leo Yuan gardens is northwest, while Tuisi Garden is about eighteen miles southeast.

M: Eighteen miles southeast. Well, maybe I won't go there this time.

W: I'd recommend visiting the garden museum next to Zhuozheng Garden and then you may want to visit the nearby Suzhou museum, famous for its abundant and rare cultural relics of Ming and Qing dynasties.

M: I see. Good, thank you.

W: You are welcome, sir.

Text 9:

W: I'm struggling to keep up with all the readings I usually end up rereading, but that feels like it takes forever and I'm constantly pressed for time. Any tips on how to manage it?

M: Definitely one essential skill is knowing how to mark a book.

W: Well, how do you do it?

M: First, read a whole paragraph before marking anything. Don't mark too much. Around ten per cent is usually enough. And I use different colors for different things. Main ideas are marked in yellow, important details in blue and new words in orange.

W: Smart. Are there other ways besides using colors for marking?

M: Absolutely. Normally, question marks are used for the confusing part, dashes for extra notes. But before an exam, I prefer to change the question mark into a smiley face to create an optimistic atmosphere.

W: Sounds great. I'll give it a try, thanks.

M: Sure, let me know if you need more tips.
